

"Step Up Reach Out"
is an international
youth leadership program designed to prepare
young people with hemophilia to become advocates for their communities.

This package contains background, course content, goals, application and everything you need to be part of this innovative program.

Step Up Reach Out is a program developed by University of Texas Health Science Center, Gulf States Hemophilia and Thrombophilia Center (UTHS), and is made possible by UTHS and a grant from Bayer HealthCare.

The decision on acceptance of applicants is at the sole discretion of the Program Committee.

Projects and presentations created by participants during the program will not be used for material gain.

Personal information about participants will not be published or shared with other organizations, unless expressly authorized by the participant.
